One-Line Mantra

- Notice the good. Build momentum. Carry it forward.

Core Ideas

- Train your attention to notice small moments of good fortune instead of overlooking them.
- What you repeatedly pay attention to becomes more familiar and easier for your brain to recognize.
- Small wins create emotional momentum that can influence the rest of your day.
- Protect positive momentum instead of unintentionally draining it with mindless habits.
- Treat life like a game of spotting opportunities, gratitude, and progress.

Mental Models

- The Favor Filter: Look for small moments that went better than expected.
- Momentum > Motivation: Build on positive energy instead of constantly restarting.
- What you notice grows in your awareness.

Daily Actions

- Each day, write down three small moments where life seemed to go your way.
- After a workout or another energizing activity, immediately move into your next meaningful task.
- When you catch yourself mindlessly drifting, ask: 'How can I keep today's momentum going?'
- Celebrate small wins instead of waiting for major milestones.

Catch Yourself Questions

- What went right today that I would normally ignore?
- How can I carry this positive momentum into my next action?
- Am I feeding gratitude or only noticing what's missing?
- What's one small win I can appreciate right now?

Pocket Summary

- The more intentionally you notice everyday moments of progress, luck, and gratitude, the easier it becomes to maintain a positive, action-oriented mindset. Small wins create momentum for bigger ones.

Balanced Perspective

- Research in positive psychology suggests that regularly noticing and savoring positive experiences can improve well-being, resilience, and motivation. It doesn't guarantee specific outcomes, but it can meaningfully shape how you experience your day and the choices you make.
